Inilex's vehicle tracking products receive awards

June 4, 2009

By Andrew Johnson

Inilex Inc., a Chandler-based maker of vehicle tracking devices, received the 2009 Product Value Leadership of the Year Award from consulting research firm Frost & Sullivan.

The award was for Inilex's SmartAlert and SkyWay products, which use global positioning system technology to track the location of vehicles.

The company markets the products as safeguards for parents who want to know where their children are traveling and as tools to recover stolen vehicles.

Users can log in to Inilex's Web site to look at information the systems compile.

"Inilex has a very high growth potential in the stolen vehicle recovery market," Frost & Sullivan Senior Research Analyst Sathyanarayana K said in a statement. "Its products fulfill an unmet need in automotive technology by offering value-added features over supplying competitors and nationwide coverage at a reasonable price."

Founded in 2003, Inilex has 23 employees, including 14 in Chandler, six in Denver and one each in California, Texas and Florida.
